App serves up options for food-first delivery

Chef Nightly. The Netflix-style food selection app offers carefully compiled list of preselected restaurants and kitchens.

The world of online dining is about to get a "food-first" facelift after Cambridge-based Chef Nightly launched its app on Tuesday.

Instead of offering a long list of local grub spots, Chef Nightly makes suggestions based on your preferences, with an emphasis on the dish itself.

"We've curated lists of meals from the best-ranked kitchens in the area, almost like Netflix for food," CEO Michael Shelley said. "We provide a visual of specific meal preferences and a profile on the ingredients, flavor and nutritional info. Next time around, we use your past choices to offer suggestions."

Each kitchen is selected by Chef Nightly, based on quality of food and service, to prepare and deliver each dish. A built-in rating system also helps ensure continued quality.

"Small-business owners know their neighborhoods really well and we leverage them and rely on their judgment. They tell us what's popular, what isn't. We talk with the chefs, we talk to everyone in the kitchen and dive into the meal," Shelley said. "Every restaurant owner knows their customers and needs a way to reach the people. They know the clients and the area; our job is to reach them."

"The whole concept of the app is data driven. If sushi is popular in the neighborhood, it'll be at the top of the list," Shelley added.

Let's say you're not up on sushi lingo and want to know what has raw meat in it, what has crab or what flavor something you've never heard of is packing. The meal profiles create a roadmap for curious consumers.

"Sometimes you just don't want to comb through a whole menu like other delivery sites have," GM Leigh Cassidy said. "Sometimes it's overwhelming when you're tired at the end of the day to go line by line through a menu."

Providing a list of the ingredients along with a picture of the meal is something like pointing to the pictures in a diner.

"The pictures bring you in, but then you get to dig deeper and see what is in the order," Cassidy said. "The suggestions section doesn't aim to dissuade you from getting your normal order. We know that people are creatures of habit, but we can say 'if you liked this, you ought to try this.'"

Chef Nightly currently has about 20,000 clients and works with more than 50 restaurants in the city. It is available on iPhone and Android in the Boston area.

Mayor Walsh: Parking too cheap in Boston

Saying $1.25 is too inexpensive a price on many streets, Boston's mayor is eyeing a hike in parking meter prices for the city.

"The bottom line is: $1.25 an hour isn't working in our busiest areas," Mayor Marty Walsh said in a prepared address to the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce on Thursday. "I like offering a good deal, but not at the price of stress and gridlock on our streets."

Long term, Walsh said his office was considering a cost bump, and also planned to study a "flexible rates based on demand" system for select curbside spots.

Walsh's comments suggest the city may go the way of ride-hailing app Uber and adopt surge pricing. The friend and foe of tech-powered transportation, surge pricing is designed to make it more likely, but more expensive to find the service you need when you need it (in Uber's case, making rides at peak times much pricier). Having spaces go for $1.25 in high-traffic areas can lead to congestion, Walsh said, as drivers circle blocks trying to squeeze into a limited supply of spaces.

A man puts money in a Boston parking meter. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Jacking up the price in prime locations, the theory goes, could send drivers elsewhere.

"Sounds reasonable," said John Waskiewicz of Arlington. "I'm an economics major, so I know supply and demand is supposed to clear markets."

Walsh said a similar program had been successful in San Francisco, and noted that Boston's curbside parking rate, a flat five quarters citywide, is comparatively low.

Walsh also said the city would be taking on a new parking-enforcement campaign. With help from a collaboration with way-finding app Waze, he said "a new class" of officers would work to cut down on double parking and enforce a policy called "don't block the box," the catchphrase referring to what happens when a driver blocks an intersection after failing to make it through a stoplight.

Toys. Employee stole $80K from Harvard to buy Legos, iPads

A former Harvard employee with a playful side is accused of stealing $80,000 from the school to buy Lego sets, iPads, televisions and other items.

Shawn Bunn, 44, who worked as a computer lab manager for the university for 17 years, allegedly used his Harvard employee credit card to pay for the personal purchases, according to Middlesex County District Attorney Marian Ryan.

The Waltham resident was arraigned Wednesday in Woburn Superior Court on charges of larceny, false entry in corporate books, and uttering of forged documents in connection with the allegations.

"This is a breach of trust by a school employee," Ryan said in a statement. "Over a period of four years the defendant is alleged to have made personal purchases in excess of $80,000 therefore diverting resources from the students and faculty of Harvard University."

Bunn allegedly used a school credit card for personal purchases and submitted false receipts to the school that were "inconsistent with the items that he bought," according to Ryan.

A review by Harvard's finance department found hundreds of unauthorized purchases on Bunn's school credit card and a search warrant executed by the Harvard Police Department at his home and office found many of those items, including Lego sets, iPads, televisions, a table saw and a garbage disposal.

Bunn was released on his own recognizance after being fitted with an electronic monitoring bracelet. His next scheduled court date is Oct. 28.

Legoland build-off event this weekend

Blocks. Fifty set to compete at the Legoland Discovery Center to become the next Master Model Builder.

Fifty of the area's most passionate amateur Lego builders will get a shot at the big leagues this weekend.

For the second time, the Legoland Discovery Center in Somerville planned to hold a competitive build-off on Saturday to pick its next Master Model Builder, a job title whose awesomeness the kid in all of us can appreciate.

"It's the best and most exciting job interview that no one else does in the world," said David Gilmore, general manager for the building block-inspired mini-amusement park. "We think it's a great way to find the attributes we're looking for."

Entrants, handpicked after an application process, were set to compete against one another to build the most impressive model in 30 minutes, based on a randomly selected theme. Then, the top five square off for the top spot. "Brick Factor" is what they're calling the contest.

The position of Master Builder opened up when the most recent one, a former New York state senator named Ian Coffey, left for another job. He won a similar build-off in 2014 at the Boston Public Library.

The job requirements include designing, building and maintaining the center's many models big and small, while also interacting with kids at the center. Remember, this is the place that features a giant, intricate replica of Fenway Park.

The competition is steep in Boston, with its flock of college grads and reputation for churning out engineers, Gilmore said. There is also a pretty high concentration of Lego stores in the area, with mall locations in Natick, Burlington, Braintree and Peabody.

"We have the biggest contingency of adult fans of Lego in the country," he said.

Arson. Teens charged in Haverhill mill fire

Four teenagers have been arrested for their role in a fire that burned an old mill to the ground.

Haverhill firefighters battled a massive blaze at an abandoned mill, which grew to a 7-alarm fire on Sunday evening. It took all night for firefighters to put the flames down. The building was beyond saving.

The four juveniles, aged 14, 15, 15 and 16, are being charged with burning of a building and will be arraigned in Lawrence Juvenile Court.

"This case has come to a swift and successful conclusion because of good old-fashioned police work among a number of agencies and importantly, assistance from the community," State Fire Marshal Stephen D. Coan said in a statement.

"Fighting fires in these vacant mills are extremely dangerous.

Without sprinklers to control these fires, they get a huge head start and are fueled by oils that have soaked into the floorboards for decades," Interim Haverhill Fire Chief Jack Parow said in a statement.

"The Haverhill Police Department is very grateful and proud of the dedicated men and women from the various law enforcement and fire agencies that acted as a cohesive team in solving this complex case," Haverhill Police Detective Captain Robert Pistone said.

The fire was investigated by members of the Haverhill Fire and Police Departments, state police assigned to the Office of the State Fire Marshal and the ATF.

A state hazardous material team responded to monitor air quality and water run-off from suppression efforts.

Before Congress, pope urges US to end hostility to immigrants

Catholics. Francis was flanked by two of America's most influential Catholics: John Boehner and Vice President Joe Biden.

In a historic speech to Congress, Pope Francis on Thursday asked Americans to end hostility toward immigrants, jumping into a divisive debate about how the country should deal with millions of undocumented workers and their families.

Bringing a message that America's power and wealth should be used to serve humanity, the pontiff said the United States must not turn its back on "the stranger in our midst."

Francis, born to an Italian immigrant family in Argentina, delivered a wide-ranging speech that addressed issues dear to U.S. liberals but also emphasized conservative values and Catholic teachings on the family.

The leader of the world's Catholics called for a more equitable economy, greater effort against climate change and an end to the death penalty globally.

His plea on immigration received frequent applause mostly from Democrats but also from Republicans, Supreme Court justices and other dignitaries packed into the House of Representatives to hear the first address by a pope to Congress.

Harsh rhetoric toward illegal immigrants has featured heavily in the race for the Republican nomination for the 2016 presidential election.

Francis drew on America's history as a country made by immigrants and said it should not be put off by the number of foreigners, especially from Latin America, who are trying to make it their home.

"We must not be taken aback by their numbers, but rather view them as persons, seeing their faces and listening to their stories, trying to respond as best we can to their situation. To respond in a way which is always humane, just and fraternal," he said. REUTERS

Candidates

Harsh rhetoric toward illegal immigrants has featured in the race for the Republican nomination for president in 2016.

- Several Republican presidential candidates were in the audience, including retired neurologist Ben Carson, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and Sen. Marco Rubio, son of Cuban immigrants.

Four killed, nine critical after bus crash on Seattle bridge

Firefighters assist victims after a crash between a bus and a tour vehicle on the Aurora Bridge. / SEATTLE FIRE DEPARTMENT / HANDOUT

Hurt. About 50 people were evaluated for injuries after the collision.

At least four people were killed and nine critically injured on Thursday when an amphibious tour bus collided with a charter bus on a Seattle bridge, the city's fire department said.

The Aurora Bridge goes over a canal linking Lake Union with the Puget Sound's Shilshole Bay. Local TV broadcast footage showed the front of the Ride the Ducks bus crumpled with debris on the ground from the impact with the other bus. Emergency personnel, including nearly 100 firefighters, were on the scene.

A witness to the crash,

"The scene was pretty gruesome. ... There were people in shock." Christenson

Jesse Christenson, 32, saw the duck boat with its turn signal on trying to get in the left lane, and then it made a sharp move to the left.

"I initially thought it was a [tire] blowout. The duck boat then hit another car with a roof rack then went head on into the oncoming tour bus," Christenson told the Seattle Times.

Four people were killed, Seattle Fire Chief Harold Scoggins told reporters.

The majority of the significant injuries were from people who were on the tour bus, a fire department spokeswoman said. Two other passenger vehicles were involved in the crash, she said.

Six patients were transported in critical condition to an area hospital and five more were expected there, a hospital spokeswoman said. Ten other patients were dispersed to other hospitals, she said. REUTERS

Seven things you need to know

Senate blocks Republican bill denying Planned Parenthood

Democrats in the U.S. Senate, joined by some Republicans, blocked an effort denying federal funds for Planned Parenthood in a move that could help avoid a government shutdown on Oct. 1.

Most Senate Republicans had supported the plan to attach the Planned Parenthood defunding to a bill keeping government operating with the start of the new fiscal year.

But 42 Democrats, two independents and on a procedural vote, 11 more than the 41 needed to block the legislation.

At least one of the Republicans, Tom Cotton of Arkansas, said he cast his vote against the bill to protest inadequate military funding.

Just before the vote, the White House warned that President Barack Obama would veto legislation to continue funding the government if it strips away federal money for Planned Parenthood, setting up the showdown with anti-abortion advocates.

"By eliminating federal funding for a major provider of health care, the Senate amendment ... would limit access to health care for women, men and families across the nation, and disproportionately impact low-income individuals," the White House statement said. REUTERS

More than 753 pilgrims die in crush in worst hajj disaster in 25 years

Stampede

Iran leader blames Saudi government

Iran's Supreme Leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, said the Saudi government should accept responsibility for the crush, in which more than 100 Iranian nationals were reported to have died.

"The Saudi government should accept the responsibility of this sorrowful incident. ... Mismanagement and improper actions have caused this catastrophe," Khamenei said in a statement published on his website. REUTERS

World reactions.

U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-moon and the White House offered condolences.

At least 753 pilgrims from around the world were killed on Thursday in a crush outside the Muslim holy city of Mecca, Saudi authorities said, in the worst disaster to strike the annual hajj pilgrimage in 25 years.

At least 863 others were injured. Saudi King Salman said he had ordered a review of haj plans after the disaster, in which two large groups of pilgrims arrived together at a crossroads in Mina, a few kilometers east of Mecca, on their way to performing the "stoning of the devil" ritual at Jamarat.

Thursday's disaster was the worst to occur at the pilgrimage since July 1990, when 1,426 pilgrims suffocated in a tunnel near Mecca. Both incidents occurred on Eid al-Adha (Feast of the Sacrifice), Islam's most important feast and the day of the stoning ritual.

Ambulances are seen on a road after 753 Muslim Hajj pilgrims were killed and at least another 863 injured in a stampede. / GETTY IMAGES

Photographs published on the Twitter feed of Saudi civil defense on Thursday showed pilgrims lying on stretchers while emergency workers in high-visibility jackets lifted them into an ambulance.

Other images showed bodies of men in white haj garments piled on top of each other. Some corpses bore visible injuries.

Unverified video posted on Twitter showed pilgrims and rescue workers trying to revive some victims.

The hajj, the world's largest annual gathering of people, has been the scene of numerous deadly stampedes, fires and riots in the past, but their frequency has been greatly reduced in recent years as the government spent billions of dollars upgrading and expanding hajj infrastructure and crowd-control technology.

Safety during haj is a politically sensitive issue for the kingdom's ruling Al Saud dynasty, which presents itself internationally as the guardian of orthodox Islam and custodian of its holiest places in Mecca and Medina.

in this funny, heartfelt tale of a weekend in the country.
Passions are ignited, lovers reunited and the wise-cracking domestic gets all the best lines as these outrageous characters come face to face with love, loss and regret. The show boasts one of Sondheim's most well-known songs, "Send in the Clowns," but the entire score is beautiful.

Nick Offerman is facing a 'Confederacy of Dunces'

The "Parks and Rec" actor heads to the Huntington to take on a comic masterpiece.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

Adapting a much-beloved and famously unadaptable novel is a daunting task. But the Huntington Theatre Company isn't letting that stop them: They're putting on a production of John Kennedy Toole's comic masterpiece "A Confederacy of Dunces" this November. And they've found just the man to wear the familiar green hunting cap of the novel's hero, Ignatius Reilly. Nick Offerman, best known as the stoic Ron Swanson on "Parks and Recreation," will be stepping into the role. Offerman, who says he's been a fan of the Huntington since his theater days in Chicago, says it's a dream role and one he was thrilled to try.

How did you end up getting involved with the show?

I was working in New York with my wife, doing this play "Annapurna" off-Broadway, and the producers of "Confederacy" called me and said, "Do you want to do a workshop of this beloved comic novel that was a huge piece of literature in my formative years?" When I started theater school, it was one of the first things the smarter kids handed me. I had no business saying yes to the workshop. I had no time to do it. And I said, "Yes, of course I'll do it."

What's the appeal of doing theater in Boston or Chicago, where you got your start?

Chicago and Boston, the great thing about those two cities is that you generally don't have the ulterior motive of Hollywood or Broadway tainting your casting or your production. If you're doing a play in those cities, it's because you love doing great theater.

L.A. isn't really known for its theater scene.

When I moved to L.A. and tried to get involved in theater there, eight out of 10 productions were just people writing a play that was like an episode of "Friends," hoping to get a TV writing job. You're like, "This doesn't feel exactly cutting edge."

What was your connection to the book like prior to this?

For the world of the comedy nerd, as it were, "Confederacy of Dunces" has always been very emblematic. It represents the feeling of righteous indignation that all of us have who have felt outcast because we're weird or because our sense of humor wasn't the same as all of the "normal people." Ignatius J. Reilly was a firebrand representing our voice. And it's just incredibly funny writing.

What did you think was important to bring from the book?

Two things come to mind. One is the personality of New Orleans itself. I feel like that's almost the star of the show. Doing the workshop was an incredible ensemble of actors who made it quite clear that the ensemble is an incredibly vibrant and rich and detailed depiction of the regular people on the street in New Orleans. And the music and the smells and the everyday depravity of human life is really, I think, the source of a great deal of the humor in the piece. And then the travails of our protagonist, Ignatius, really represent the human condition, set against the titular Confederacy of Dunces — the way we all feel. It's so easy for any of us to feel that the world is a group of dips—ts conspiring against us.

What about the part of Ignatius makes you most excited?

As soon as I started reading the role. I just tapped into this sort of whining, solipsistic voice that I had in me. I was thrilled. I said, "Wow, this take feels very right." I'll be interested to see what everyone else thinks. And then we did the workshop and everyone seemed to agree that I was well-suited to playing a loudly whining baby.

That's very different from the stoic, manly types you've played in the past.

That was also very attractive. As enjoyable as it has been to assay the role of Ron Swanson for seven years, now that the show has ended, it's become very important to me to find roles that can distance me from Ron Swanson so that I can hopefully get more work beyond "Parks and Rec." [Laughs]

Well, at least Ignatius also calls upon you for strong mustache work, just as Ron did.

The mustache will act as the footbridge by which we can cross the path of my career choices.

"A Confederacy of Dunces" runs Nov. 11 to Dec. 13 at the BU Theatre at 264 Huntington Ave. Tickets are $25-$155.

The comedian is letting it all out on her new tour.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

Margaret Cho has broken down barriers throughout her career. How many hugely popular, openly bisexual, Korean American standup comedians are there out there? She's now embarking on a new tour, which she's unapologetically calling "The Psycho Tour." In advance of her stop at the Wilbur this fall, we checked in with Cho to talk about politically outspoken comedy, gay rights and how to do "Fashion Police" right.

Why call the tour the "Psycho" tour?

It's a really feminizing word, to deal with female insanity in the same way that hysterical is often attributed to women. Even the movie "Psycho" is Anthony Perkins taking on his mother's persona as his sort of craziness, so I think it's a good way to feminize my own brand of insanity. It's just about all of the craziness happening in the world with all of the gun violence and police brutality and the rising tide of violence against women. All of this stuff makes me so crazy, and so I'm trying to heal all of this suffering with my own craziness.

And crazy is always the go-to insult for women, isn't it?

And to shut them down. To keep a woman from speaking or to make her actions seem invalid.

You've always been someone who had a huge LGBT following, and makes a lot of jokes about the community. Now that the LGBT community is seeing huge changes in both legal rights and a new degree of acceptance, does it change how you talk about LGBT rights at all?

I don't think so. It doesn't change the overall message. There's always going to be homophobia. There's always going to be something to address there. I think that gets expressed even more strongly when we have proven to be very important members of the mainstream, and so that becomes very threatening to people who want to

little 'Psycho'

hang onto their homophobic ideas.

What else gets you riled up these days?

There's so much. There's all of this craziness. Like there's Jared Fogle and there's this whole thing with Bill Cosby, which is such a nightmare and so disgusting. Just the way the victims are treated in the media — I think it's just a real problem.

When something is as dark as that, is it hard to find a way to joke about it?

Yeah, I think so. I think you have to sort of figure it out. The thing about Cosby that's so ludicrous is that every single one of these women had the same story. They're all the same. They were all sedated and they all woke up and had the same sweater print on their face. It's the same story. That, to me is funny. That's just part of the way that we have to figure out how to talk about it. It's infuriating, but there's something ludicrous about it.

You recently had a turn hosting "Fashion Police." What's the secret to making the show work?

It's not about shaming anybody for who they are. It's definitely having fun with their looks and our looks. There's an art to it, I think, where it's not about cruelty and it's not about shaming people. There's definitely a way to do it that's funny and makes it not about fashion victims and makes it a celebration of fashion itself.

Joan Rivers was

the acknowledged master at it. What do you think she did that worked so well?

She just had so many jokes. She was such a real joke machine. That's what I think I would like to bring to it, is that.

You've talked about her being an important person in your life. How did she influence you?

It's just in my life. She always had a lot of gratitude about everything. I would like to get to that point where I could be as gracious as she always was towards everybody and everything. She had life lessons for me, for sure. She's a strong force, and did so much for women in comedy and for me personally, so I just love her.

STEELY DAN & DAN FOGELBERG

Tribute Band

A Celebration of

with the "Don Campbell Band"

Hey Nineteen, a Tribute to Steely Dan, is comprised of top musicians, many of whom have performed with Grammy-winning, international artists. Hey Nineteen brings the big hits and the deep cuts, from "Do It Again" to "Your Gold Teeth II," from "Reelin' In the Years" to "Doctor Wu," and many more.

Singer-songwriter Dan Fogelberg was a multi-platinum selling artist, with hits such as "Leader of the Band," "Longer," "Same Old Lang Syne" and over 20 albums. He died in 2007, but his music remains a huge influence over Don Campbell, who produces musical tributes to Dan, in addition to his own music.

Strandbeests come to town

The giant moving structures are traveling the country for the first time.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

The creatures are tall and ungainly looking, with a geometric skeletal structure and an uncanny gait. It's hard to look away once they get moving, but that's just the magic of the Strandbeests, the evolving wind-powered structures built out of plastic tubing that Dutch artist Theo Jansen has been building over the last two decades. It has been a meticulous process of trial and error over the years as Jansen has tried to find the right design to make them self-sufficient. The first American tour of the Strandbeests has just begun at the Peabody Essex Museum, and we talked to Jansen about his life's work.

How did you first get started working on this project?

It was in 1990. I was a writer in those days, and I wrote a column in the newspaper about the idea of some skeletons which would catch the wind from the beach, and they would build dunes by themselves, and they would protect the country from the rise of the sea level. After publication, nothing happened. And then I passed a tool shop, and I bought some of these tubes, because these tubes are used in Holland for electric conduits, for cables and houses. And I played for an afternoon with the tubes and then the next afternoon I'd seen so many things that I decided to spend one year on the tubes, and things got totally out of hand, because that was 25 years ago.

Why do you use only those tubes to create them?

The first reason to use this material is because it's cheap. But going on with it, I noticed that I get attached to the material, and I notice that I could use it as a building system. Since then, I tried to restrict myself just to this kind of tube, but philosophically, you could also say that the real creator — he just used protein to make us and so you could say that the real creator restricted himself or herself with the choice of his material ... At first thought, you restrict yourself and your possibilities as well, but in fact, it forces you to take routes that are not very

Chvrches is sounding

Singer Lauren Mayberry says the group tried to stay true to their sound for their second album.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

Some bands start to crack under the pressure of coming up with a solid follow-up if they've had huge success with their first record, but that doesn't seem to be the problem with Chvrches. The Scottish group had a bona fide hit with 2013's "The Bones of What You Believe," but singer Lauren Mayberry says they weren't getting too wrapped up in the hype while they worked on the upcoming "Every Open Eye," which comes out Sept. 25.

"I don't think you can really let that stuff get into your head too much, because if you sit and focus on all those outside elements, you're not going to be able to write anything," she explains. "We started this band to write songs together and we hadn't really gotten to do that for a very long time, so it was actually very refreshing and nice to be able to go back and focus on writing."

The group was also focused on trying to make something that felt like a Chvrches album, rather than getting wrapped up in trying to outdo themselves on their sophomore effort. "We were quite conscious of being strict with ourselves in terms of being our own editors and not putting layers and layers into a song in an effort to make it feel epic," Mayberry says.

That effort involved replicating as much as of their earlier process as possible. "We self record and self produce everything, which has so many benefits," says Mayberry.

The result will be familiar to everybody who fell in love with the band the first time around, which Mayberry says is one of the things she's most proud of about the new record. "It sounds like our band. I don't think we've gone in and completely changed the kind of band we are, or the kind of music we make, but it sounds to me like a natural evolution."

In other words, don't go in expecting them to have brought in famous produc-

Speaking out

One less positive aspect to the success the band has found has been the online abuse people send to them. Mayberry has shared samples of the misogynistic things that get sent to them, and has become known for speaking up when it occurs.

Asked what influenced her to speak up, she says, "I think it's just constantly being beaten over the head with a mentality that I don't agree with. We're incredibly lucky to get to do the job we do and there are so many amazing elements of that, but I wouldn't accept that kind of treatment or behavior in any other kind of profession, so I don't really see you're supposed to accept it in this line of work."

She says that overall she's very happy that social media allows the group to interact with fans. "A lot of the fans are so passionate and so dedicated that it's really great for us to be able to communicate with them on a person-to-person level and not have it coming through a kind of Chvrches HQ filter. We're not going to change the way we do that because of the behavior of a minority of people, because in my mind, that's letting people win and it's ruining a fan community that we've worked really hard to build and be a part of."

ers or celebrity guest vocalists. "At this point, I don't really think it's something that would benefit us," says Mayberry. "I don't really think anybody has a better sense of what the band is than the people who have lived in it day in and day out for all that time."

Mayberry says a combination of things have led to their confidence in their sound, whether it's their own growth as people and creators or the work done by touring so much, but fans should expect a Chvrches album that's "a little bit more assertive and a little bit more sure of itself."

Mavis Staples and Joan Osborne

At first glance, Osborne is punching well outside her weight class on a tour with Mavis Staples. Staples is a living legend in gospel and soul; Osborne is probably best remembered for her one hit "What if God Was One of Us?" being a punch line in an Austin Powers movie. But to her credit, Osborne faded from the Billboard charts into a side career as a successful soul singer and was nominated for a Grammy for the blues in 2012. Is that enough to earn your attendance? Just remember, if the legendary Staples is the better half of the duo, she's still half the duo.

EL VY

The joint project of The National's Matt Berninger and Brent Knopf of Menomena and Ramona Falls is pronounced "like the plural of Elvis." Between now and showtime, EL VY will release its first album, which is about the romance between two characters based on Mike Watt and D. Boon from The Minutemen. Neither Berninger nor Knopf will commit to EL VY permanently, which is a shame. It'd sure be great to hear a musical heist fantasy featuring characters based on Fugazi.

Okkervil River

Will Sheff is not a dance-around-the-stage kind of guy — and alt-country isn't really a dance-around-the-stage type of music. But he sings with such intensity at live shows that he works himself into a noticeable sweat. With their next big release being the deluxe reissue of their magnum opus "Black Sheep Boy," Okkervil River doesn't really have too much else to sweat about.

The Avett Brothers just

Seth Avett says he and his brother are drawn to writing about some of the more upsetting moments in their lives.

lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

You may have thought the Avett Brothers went on hiatus after the gap between albums following the double whammy of 2012's "The Carpenter" and 2013's "Magpie and the Dandelion." But the band has been working as hard as ever on some new material.

"I think it seems like we took a longer break than we did, where in actuality we toured pretty much nonstop," says Seth Avett, who shares singing and songwriting duties with brother Scott. "We just go go go, lay low in the winter time, then hit it hard in the summer and get into the studio whenever we can."

Avett says the previous double release was the result of a marathon recording session that resulted in two albums' worth of material.

"I remember at the end of that whole thing being just absolutely done, just so exhausted," he says.

While he's unwilling to promise release dates, Avett does say he hopes new material will be available next March. And you can expect plenty of songs about one of the band's favorite topics: heartbreak.

"When you get old enough, when you survive long enough ... you learn what it is to have your heart broken," he says. "If you go through something intense enough, the lucky thing is that if you're an artist, if it hits you hard enough, you'll still be able to draw on that thing 20 years later."

He says he and Scott write autobiographically, and "heartbreak is part of it. So is love, and so is survival, and so is mortality and resolve, and all kinds of things."

Side project

Avett did step away from his core project to work with singer Jessica Lea Mayfield on an album of Elliott Smith covers. While he's always happy to get back to it, he says, "There was a lot of value in stepping away from the Avett Brothers for a minute, if for nothing else than just to enjoy playing small theaters, more intimate rooms, with less production, less bodies, less spectacle, in a way."

As to what inspired him to work specifically on Elliott Smith songs, Avett says, "I've always been drawn to music that has a very catchy aspect, like a pop sensibility, but lyrically is almost painfully honest and can go to a very dark place, but also sort of make you sing along. When you listen to Elliott Smith, it's pretty clear that there is no wall between you and him."

De Niro teaches Hathaway actual good lessons in 'The Intern'

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Nancy Meyers is a saccharine, sometimes shameless filmmaker of transgressive ideas like: maybe an older man such as Jack Nicholson should consider sleeping with women his age ("Something's Gotta Give"); or, hey, middle-aged people can have sex too ("It's Complicated").

Her latest, "The Intern," offers two solid, even weirdly necessary messages for the price of one. The first is that retirees have advice to offer the young (advice that isn't toooooo old school, or retrograde, that is). The second is that women in positions of power shouldn't feel bad about wielding it — and shouldn't fret over not having enough time to play wife or even mom while tending to their busy careers.

As always, Meyers cakes these lessons in a broad, populist and not unentertaining blob that runs a little too long, is a little too soft around the edges and features at least one major misstep. But it's more engaging than most of her movies.

Robert De Niro, a warm if vaguely pained smile permanently tattooed on his face, plays Ben, a widower who becomes an intern for a online clothing startup run by workaholic Jules (Anne Hathaway). She's stressed and remote, but Ben worms his way into her affections.

If this was a film from another era — or simply from another filmmaker — Ben would enter Jules' life to teach her the value of knowing her place in the home and in society. He would remind her of the values we've lost in the Internet age, that family is always first and so forth. But Ben doesn't roll that way. Instead, he gives her pep talks and assures her that her wish to run her business the way she wants to is something she shouldn't give up. If this is mansplaining, or oldsplaining, it's at least promoting something rarely seen in the movies, or even on the Internet.

SPORTS

PGA Tour

Tour will name Champ

It's a busy sports weekend, with a full slate of NFL action along with the second-to-last weekend of regular season baseball. And with the NHL and NBA seasons on the horizon, one sport will wrap up its regular season Sunday. The PGA's season-long trek for the FedEx Cup will conclude after the TOUR Championship in Atlanta, and five golfers have a good shot at winning the $10 prize bonus (in addition to regular tournament winnings). If new world No. 1 Jason Day, Jordan Spieth, Ricky Fowler, Henrik Stenson or Bubba Watson post the lowest score after 72 holes Sunday, the winner becomes champion. The other 25 golfers have a chance, but need some help from other golfers.

Will Week 2's top performers keep it up?

The second week of the 2015 NFL season is in the books on FanDuel, and lucky us, another round of high-stakes fantasy football is just a few short days away. Before we turn our collective focus to Week 3, let's take the opportunity to sharpen the priceless tool that is our hindsight, with one last look back at the top scorers, best value picks, and biggest busts of Week 2.

Week 2's best value

Cleveland wide receiver Travis Benjamin put up one of the most efficient games of the season to date in Week 2, turning just 4 targets into 3 catches for 115 yards and a pair of touchdowns against a hapless Titans defense. The fact that he was priced at a mere $5,000 on FanDuel turned that economical production into the single most valuable performance yet this season. To put it in perspective, Benjamin's value ratio of 5.2 fantasy points per thousand dollars in FanDuel salary would have equated to a score of 372 fantasy points across a full $60,000 salary cap.

TRAVIS BENJAMIN - 31 FANTASY POINTS ($5,000)

Week 2's biggest bust

There's no such excuse for why Tampa Bay's Mike Evans sits with zero fantasy points through two weeks of the 2015 season. Evans missed Week 1, but was active in Week 2 against the Saints and still went without a catch on 3 targets from rookie QB Jameis Winston. Some of the blame certainly rests on the New Orleans offense doing so little that the Bucs only attempted 21 passes, but even with a salary reduction to $7,400 Evans is a risky play in Week 3 against the Texans.

MIKE EVANS - 0 FANTASY POINTS THROUGH 2 WEEKS

Week 2's champ

FanDuel NFL Sunday Million tournament winner Jeremiah1974db avoided these busts and struck just the right balance of top scorers and values in Week 2, turning a $25 entry fee into a score of 209.66 points and a cool $1 million first place prize in his first ever FanDuel contest win.

I WAS WRONG ABOUT BILLS, BUT NOT PATS

When the New England Patriots went into Buffalo and defeated the Bills 40-32 last Sunday, I heard about it from everyone and their mother.

No, I didn't need the update. I watched Tom Brady carve up Rex Ryan's defense for 466 yards and three touchdowns with my own eyes. Like most in New England, I was thrilled to see the Patriots silence Ralph Wilson Stadium.

But entering the game, I had told you the Bills would win. So when I was wrong, it came at me from all angles.

"Pic, how could you bet against the Pats?"

"I can't believe you thought the Bills would win!"

"Danny, when are you going to learn?!"

These people didn't acknowledge the fact that I also picked the Patriots to win the AFC East, clinch the No. 1 seed in the AFC, and go on to win Super Bowl 50.

And in fact, none of these people were on-board with me last year after the Patriots' Week 4 debacle in Kansas City when they got crushed by the Chiefs, 41-14, on "Monday Night Football," opened the season with a 2-2 record and had an offensive line that couldn't block to save its life.

Everyone told me, "These aren't the Patriots we know." I responded with, "Nah, the Patriots I know will return home and crush the Cincinnati Bengals at home on 'Sunday Night Football." They defeated the Bengals, 43-17, went on a seven-game win streak and ultimately won the Super Bowl.

Needless to say, I'm still waiting for those texts to roll in, commending me for sticking with the team during its darkest hour.

Only, I wasn't sticking with the team just because they were the Patriots. I predicted a turnaround last year because their issues were fixable. Nonetheless, the offensive line started blocking, Brady all of a sudden had all these weapons, and the Darrelle Revis-led defense lived up to the hype.

It wasn't an earth-shattering turn of events. Much like the Bills giving the Patriots fits in Buffalo last Sunday wouldn't have been too shocking.

But I was wrong, about that at least. I was wrong that the Bills scary front-four would expose a young and inexperienced interior offensive line for the Patriots. In fact, the difference in the game was at the line of scrimmage. It just wasn't the scenario I had expected. Because the Patriots were the ones getting to the quarterback. No more evident than their eight total sacks in the win.

I predicted it to be the other way around. But again, I was wrong.

My point is, even if I was right and the Bills won, I would never be here telling you that the Patriots were dethroned. I would never be telling you that the division is wide open. Because I honestly don't feel that way.

So when the Patriots crush the Jacksonville Jaguars at home on Sunday, I don't expect to be getting any calls. But even if I'm wrong and the Jaguars shock the world, I'll still be sitting here telling you the Patriots are going to win the AFC East, clinch the No. 1 seed in the AFC, and go on to win Super Bowl 50.

NFL. Panthers, Browns are safe bets in Week 3 action

We think Cam Newton will lead Carolina to a win Sunday. / GETTY IMAGES

New Orleans Saints at Carolina Panthers (-3)
I'm not necessarily buying into the Panthers after wins over the Jaguars and Texans, but I am definitely selling on the Saints. Drew Brees was looked at by Dr. James Andrews during the week, and while he found nothing that required surgery, Brees is definitely less than 100 percent. I don't want a balky Brees (or Saints backup Luke McCown) going against the stalwart Panthers defensive unit, which has allowed the fifth-fewest YPG in the league despite facing the most plays from scrimmage in two games. Cam Newton, who has looked good to start the 2015 season, should be able to march his offense down the field at will against the perennially putrid Saints stoppers.
The pick: Carolina -3

Oakland Raiders at Cleveland Browns (-3.5)
It was cool to see the Raiders grab a win as big home underdogs last week, but they're in for a dose of reality as they travel to the "Dawg Pound" this Sunday. Josh McCown is getting the nod at QB for the Browns despite Johnny Manziel's great game against the Titans last week, but it doesn't really matter who's starting because the Raiders are bringing their NFL-worst defense to town. Oakland is a dreadful 1-19 in its last 20 road games, and the last time the Raiders were underdogs of fewer than six points on the road was December of 2013, when they lost to the Jets. The Browns look like the bargain of the week.

The pick: Cleveland -3.5

Denver Broncos (-2.5) at Detroit Lions
The Broncos' opportunistic defense has been instrumental in the team's 2-0 start, but Peyton Manning has not been as bad this season as people will have you believe. The main reason for Manning's shaky beginning has been the pressure applied by the aggressive Ravens and Chiefs defenses. But Manning's two-minute drill in Kansas City in Week 2 demonstrated that Peyton is far from done. Meanwhile, the Lions have looked listless in two road losses to the Chargers and Vikings, and although Detroit has been much better at home the last few years, their defense, which was one of the best in the league in 2014, is now amongst the dregs of the NFL. Expect Denver to make a statement with a convincing win in the Motor City.

The pick: Denver -3.

Things to watch for as Patriots face the Jags

ML The Patriots are big favorites against the very young Jaguars.

The Patriots look to start the year 3-0 for the fifth time under Bill Belichick when they host the Jacksonville Jaguars on Sunday afternoon.

If history is any indication, they shouldn't have much trouble doing it, either.

The Patriots are 9-1 against the Jaguars all-time (including playoffs) and undefeated (6-0) at home against them.

And the Jaguars are, after all, the Jaguars. They don't exactly invoke fear around the rest of the league. Despite the Jags beating the Dolphins last weekend, the Patriots are two-touchdown favorites to win. But this is the NFL, and as the saying goes, "Any given Sunday ..."

Here's what the Patriots need to focus on to improve to 3-0 for the first time since 2013.

JIMMY TOSCANO
@MetroBoston
sports@metro.us

Lining them up

The numbers may not back it up entirely, but the Patriots defense is still in good hands in the middle of the field, where Dont'a Hightower and Jamie Collins patrol. Yes, the team ranks 29th in total defense (406.5 yards) and tied for 28th in rushing defense (147.0 yards), but Hightower and Collins are two young, reliable linebackers and will be instrumental to limiting Jags QB Blake Bortles. Bortles had a career game last week with 273 passing yards, two touchdowns, and no interceptions. He also ripped off a 28-yard run.

The Patriots defensive unit is better than their stats suggest after two games. / GETTY IMAGES

Study up

The Patriots and Jaguars have only played six regular season games against each other. It's nothing remotely close to a division game, and seeing as the Pats are usually division winners, they don't get scheduled against the lowly Jags often, either. While a good week of practice always translates to the gridiron, the team will need an especially good week in the film room and reading over the scouting report. Jaguars head coach Gus Bradley is the former defensive coordinator of the Seahawks under Pete Carroll, so there are some similarities there.

"We've got to get to know them," Bill Belichick said. "We've got to spend more time studying them, each individual player understanding how they use them, what their skills are and understanding the scheme and how they fit within that scheme."

Old friends

Tom Brady currently sits at 399 career passing touchdowns and will most likely hit the 400-mark on Sunday. But it will be a shock if he has close to 59 passing attempts as he did last week. LeGarrette Blount made his return to the team last week, but took just two handoffs. It was once again all Dion Lewis, who had seven carries and six receptions in the win.

The Patriots should try to get Blount involved more in this game and establish a little bit of a run attack, especially if they take a big lead in the early going.
